Energy Trading Intern – Meteorology – e360 power, Austin, TX

Responsibilities:
- Utilize your expertise in weather forecasting to evaluate risks and opportunities within the US Gas and Power markets.
- Create and apply quantitative models to forecast weather patterns and analyze their effects on energy pricing.
- Convert meteorological data into clear, concise reports and presentations to support strategic decision-making within the organization.
- Keep up-to-date with the latest developments in meteorological science and the practices of energy trading.
- Work closely with the commercial team to identify and leverage trading opportunities driven by weather conditions.

Requirements:
- Bachelor's degree in meteorology, physics, geoscience, or a related discipline.
- Strong analytical skills, with a focus on problem-solving and delivering results.
- Ability to work collaboratively as part of a team.
- Experience in numerical modeling, data analysis, and statistical techniques is beneficial.
- Skills in programming languages like Python or R are advantageous.